I provide strategic, business-oriented advice and representation to companies and public actors as they navigate legal challenges.

Corentin Chevallier focuses on environmental law, energy law and public law matters. He advises private and public clients on climate change and environmental issues, including those regarding polluted soils, mining, hazardous and registered facilities, waste law, water and air quality emissions law, and as well as energy regulations and infrastructure projects.

In addition, Corentin has developed an expertise in environmental disputes and has worked on matters relating to the environmental administrative, civil and criminal liability of industrial operators.

Corentin also has a strong track record working on public law matters, including planning, administrative contracts, government liability, and expropriation claims.
